

STRUGGLE FOR WOMEN'S EMANCIPATION MEANS COMBATIVE SELF ORGANISATION OF WOMEN TOWARDS SOCIAL LIBERATION

The 8th of March is a day of struggle. Struggle for the emancipation of women which will come from women self organizing their struggle towards social liberation. The oppressed women know that in order to fight the patriarchy which enslaves us, we must also fight the state and capitalism. State, capital and patriarchy feed one another in order for the bosses to segregate and exploit the people. The 8th of March cannot fit into void liberal concepts about gender equality within a world of generalized inequality. This day should be a day of resistance, an opportunity for women to take the streets together, to organize our militant and anti-institutional fight against every form of oppression.

In the regions of Turkey and Kurdistan, women have been fighting a war against many fronts, against the Turkish fascist regime, against the theocratic totalitarianism of the Islamic State, against patriarchy. The revolution in the autonomous regions of Kurdistan is a living example of the combative self organization of women towards social autonomy. Women fighters call on this day, all resisting and working women to intensify their struggle, to make this day a day of resistance, to honor the murdered women whose bodies were dragged into the streets as trophies of the enemy. We draw inspiration and strength from the example of the women of Kurdistan so as to intensify our struggle here and everywhere.

Us women must militantly organize in order to brake our chains!
